

Field and Garden.

Grapes and Wines.

The growing of the grape culture to the advantage of the grape culture and the manufacture of wine in this country is highly gratifying to reflecting and practical men. In both a pecuniary and moral sense the entering upon these new means of occupation promises the most salutary blessings. The grape crop is an addition to the variety of crops, and increases the security of the laborer from the waywardness of seasons. The introduction of wine as a common beverage among our people will promote temperance and health by diminishing the consumption of the detestable distilled liquors of these times, which debauch the intellect and destroy the physical power of men. It may be that this is one national blessing wrought, in a degree, out of a national evil, thus illustrating the principle of compensation which, like a golden thread, runs through the laws of Providence. Congress seized upon distilled spirits as a subject of taxation susceptible of unlimited assessment, and planted upon them such a tax as curtailed their consumption and drove men to seek for other stimulants that are cheaper. This suggests the making of wine to meet a new demand; and has given to the cultivation of the grape the greatest incentive yet afforded to it on this continent. In this way a great public blessing is to be secured to the country.

There is another view of the advantages of the manufacture of pure domestic wine. The consequences of inebriety from the strong alcoholic drinks of the country have led to the establishment of total abstinence societies whose success has not been at all settled question. The entire rejection of stimulating drinks, its affirmed by some physiologists, is not consistent with the natural wants and tastes of men, and in too many instances has resulted in a return to drink with a greater recklessness than ever, a sense of violated pledges increasing the desire to drown recollection of the past in intoxication.

The general use of the pure juice of the grape would be the best safeguard against the mighty evil of drunkenness that could be devised. To see this we have but to compare wine-drinking communities with those given to the free use of ardent spirits. France is a wine country. Every peasant drinks his wine. He takes it at all his meals. It is grateful and beneficial to him. So in all the walks of life—the richer classes consuming the better qualities. The festive scenes of the country are not marred by excess, though not wanting in animation and joy. Intemperance, with her bloated cheeks, red eyes, and flaming countenance, does not startle the gay revellers by her shocking apparition. The gentle stimulus of the grape lends its inspiration to the scene without maddening the brain or diminishing the sense of pleasure.

Not so in countries given to strong drink; the effects of which need not be dwelt upon in this country. Let us hope that those who have embarked in the cultivation of the grape in this country may pursue the enterprise with industry and skill, and be amply rewarded by the fruits of their labor. In a few years we shall have secured a blessing which cannot be too highly prized.—Richmond Dispatch.

Points in Cattle.

In a recent work on cattle in their various relations—to the shambles, the yoke and the dairy, written by the Hon. Lewis F. Allen, a veteran breeder and a close observer of cattle, certain points are enumerated which should be considered by farmers and butchers in making their selections. Among the requirements are:

- 1st. A fine head, small and lean.
- 2d. A broad, full and deep chest, giving room for well developed and vigorous lungs to play.
- 3d. Good length, breadth and soundness of body, roomy and full from shoulder to hip, with low flanks, thus giving room for viscera or bowels, and expansion for the lungs in a female.
- 4th. Straight back, broad hips, and good length of loin.
- 5th. Fineness of bone, and smoothness of carcass generally.

"All these," says Mr. Allen, "are indispensable," whether in an animal bred for propagating its kind, for flesh solely, or for labor, or a cow for milk. The intermediate parts or points of the animals may be filled out to promote the objects desired for the particular uses the creature is to be applied to; but all which we have enumerated are indispensable in making up a good animal.

Salt in Fattening Swine.

A correspondent states some interesting experiments to test the use of salt in fattening swine. He selected two pairs of barrow hogs, weighing one hundred pounds each. One pair received with their daily allowance of feed two ounces of salt, the other pair similarly fed, none. In the course of a week, it was easily seen the salted pair had a much better appetite than the others, and after a fortnight it was increased two ounces each.

After four months the weight of the salted hogs was three hundred and fifty pounds each, while that of the unsalted, five weeks later, reached only three hundred pounds. The experiment was repeated with almost the same result. A correspondent feeds young pigs according to their age, a quarter of an ounce daily, to breeding sows, very little during pregnancy, and in the heat of summer, withholds it in a degree from all, as it induces thirst and liability to disease.—Exchange.

Distance between Trees in Plantations.

Standard Apples, 30 feet apart each way. In poor soils, 25 feet may be enough. Standard Pears and Cherries, 20 feet apart each way. Cherries will do at 15 feet, and the Dwarf growing sorts, Dukes and Morellos, even at 10 feet. Standard Plums, Peaches, Apricots, and Nectarines, 15 to 18 feet apart each way. Quinces, 10 to 12 feet apart each way. Pyramidal Apples, Pears, Cherries and Plums, 10 to 12 feet apart each way. The greater distance is better where land is not scarce. Dwarf Apples (bushes) 6 feet apart. Currants, Gooseberries and Raspberries, 3 to 4 feet apart. Blackberries, 6 to 7 feet apart. Strawberries should be planted in rows 3 feet apart, and the plants 18 inches apart, at least. In cultivating them for market, the rows ought to be 3 1/2 to 4 feet apart, to admit of culture with the horse hoe or cultivator.—Ellis's and Barry's Catalogue.
